EL PASO HERALD

succession, The Dally News, The Telegraph, The Telegram, The Tribune,
The Graphic, The Sun, The Advertiser, The Independent,
The Journal, The Republican, The Bulletin.

Entered at the Posteffice in El Pasc, Tex., as Second Class Matter,

Dedicated to the service of the people, that no good cause shall lack a champion, and that svil shall not thrive unopposed.

She Daily Herald is insued eix days a week and the Weekly Herald is published every Thursday, at El Pass, Texas; and the Sunday Mail Edition is also sent to Weekly Subscribers.

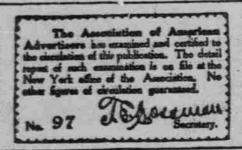

TELEPHONES.)

Delly Herald, per month, 80c; per year, $7.00: Weekly Herald, per year, $2.04.
The Daily Herald is delivered by carriers in El Paso, East El Paso, Fert Eliss and Towne, Texas, and Ciudad Juarea, Mexico, at 80 cents a month.

A subscriber desiring the address on his paper changed will please state has communication both the old and the new address.

Subscribers failing to get The Herald promptly should call at the office or selephone No. 118 before 6:30 p. m. All complaints will receive prompt attention.

CIBCULATION. Herald bases advertising all advartising sentracts on a guarante of a guarante of more than twice the circulation of any other Ell Pase, Arizona, Kew Mexico or West Texas paper. Daily average HERALD TRAVO ELING AGENTS Persons solicited to subscribe for The Herald should beware of imposnot pay money to anyone unless he can show that he is legally author-ized by the El Paso Herald.

Newspapers and Advertising

THE American Newspaper Publishers' association is waging a campaign against the seekers of free advertising. It is an abuse that needs to be corrected. The American public usually believes that newspapers are published for the sole purpose of giving free publicity to individual plans for making money or building up a reputation. A newspaper that wastes its space in this manner is recreant in its trust to its readers,

A newspaper's business is first of all to give its readers the news. It sells the paper to the subscribers for much less than the cost of production, usually for less than the cost of the white paper and the ink. The advertising columns afford the source of revenue for the papers. It is the practice to run a given amount of advertising to a certain amount of news-about in equal proportions, but in the first class paper, the news generally predominates.

This news space should be news; the publishers of the paper owe this to the readers. When it is taken up with matters not news-accounts of the merits of a certain make of automobile, the beauty of such and such a system of shorthand or music study, the merits of somebody's suburban addition, or the gifts of some orator, singer or medical practitioner who is profiting pecuniarily by the advertising, the people are robbed of just that much news. Yet many people have a habit of entering a newspaper office with "something to fill up with."

Every paper boils down and leaves out as much news matter as is printed every day. If a paper ever got to be large enough that it wanted "something to fill up with," the publishers would soon be in the poorhouse. It is the business of the editor to select the best news-what is most interesting to the most people-and print it. "Big stories" have to be treated as such, according to their news value. Matters of small general interest on the other hand, have to be reduced to the smallest possible space. It is not always because the editor wishes it, but because the public demands it; he knows what the public wants.

After the news is selected-and news is something that has happened or will happen that interests the public; something that all people want to know about; not John Jones's concert next week, which would interest a few people at most and net Mr. Jones considerable revenue if he could get it into the paperbut something big and interesting.

When a matter is not of interest to the majority of the readers, then it right- | regular profile and the black mustache, fully belongs in the advertising columns and the publisher has a right to ask that it be paid for. Anything that will benefit somebody financially comes under the heading of advertising, whether it is a church social or the sale of bonds to build a railroad. The advertising space of a newspaper is its stock. Nobody thinks of asking the haberdasher to donate a suit of clothes, but many ask space equal to the price of a suit of clothes from the publisher. The automobile man has no more right to ask the publisher to donate space for boosting his 1911 model car than the publisher has to ask the auto maker to donate him a 1911

That man H. B. Jones up at Tucumcari is getting to be a regular J. P. Morgan-just takes a new bank under his arm every time he wants diversion of

The Swedish church of Kansas City is suing a miner for a divy on his profits from an Alaskan claim, alleging that the church "grubstaked" him when he went out to find his fortune. That church will be playing policy next.

Diaz will do some destroying that will make Creighton's look like a penny with a hole in it beside a brand new double eagle if he lays hands on the young American who is so busy burning bridges between El Paso and Chihuahua.

The Harriman legatees are complaining because they have had to pay two million dollars inheritance tax. If they object so strenuously, let them pass the inheritances down this way and most any El Pasoan will be glad to pay the tax.

A California man wrote two postal cards, one to his wife and one to another woman and then addressed them wrong. The one the wife got was just as sweet as could be, but she wants a divorce just the same. Women are finnicky creatures.

Congress Of Farm Women

CONGRESS of farm women is to be held in Colorado Springs next Octocussing the problems of the soil and its products, the women, too, will be discussing advancements in farm methods and products. It is just as much advantage to discuss advancement in methods of housekeeping, gardening and dairying as it is to discuss the best method to plow, harrow, plant and harvest the crops.

often undergoes more hardships than her husband. Anything that will lighten her burden and improve the conditions under which she works should be welcomed by both sexes alike. It will make life more attractive in the country, it will make the families on the farm more prosperous and contented and will tend

Mrs. Burns deserves every assistance in her undertaking and she should receive the thanks of the all rural communities for her earnest endeavors in bringing the women of the farms together, for a better farming community will make

It is to be hoped that the attendance at the congress will be large and that even with that, the first meeting will be but a small beginning of what could prove one of the most useful organizations in the country, for when these plain farm mothers get together, their influence is going to be nationwide.

The Red Sox can come nearer living up to their names than the White Sox. It's not so hard to keep the color.

News "from insurrecto sources" is getting to be about as reliable as "from the Mexican foreign office."

just gave the big stick a rap or two and that settled it. The mayor of Rome, Italy, is sending out invitations to American mayors to be present in a short time at the celebration of the 50th anniversary of the proclamation making Rome the Italian capital. None of the invitations have yet dropped around to El Paso. Probably the mayor has heard of the way Henry

Kelly garners in everything in sight in the way of public offices and is letting

UNCLE WALT'S Denatured Poem

STOOD, in the sweet, soft gloaming, alone by the pasture bars, and there with a deep emotion, I gazed at the glowing stars, and my bosom was filled with yearning for better and higher things, and I wished that my soul might journey up there on its shining wings. To roam in the maze of planets! To follow the starry track! Then a bag of sand from an airship fell on me and broke my back. I stood on the frozen river, and thought of the prisoned stream, that journeyed along beneath me, shut out from the sunlight's gleam. "How much like my own existence," I mused, "is this river's flow! Shut out from the rays of sunshine, and doomed to the dark below! How much like this sullen river, concealed from Dame Nature's smiles-". Then I stepped in an unseen airhole, and drowned in a dozen styles. Whenever I pause to ponder on problems that vex the soul, catastrophes always happen, and put me deep in the hole. And so I shall cease to question the streams and the heavens dumb; I'll kick up my heels and gambol, and take things just as they come.

MEDITATIONS

Copyright, 1911, by George Marchews Adams.

West Masse

Dorothy Dix Asks What Is TRUE

What is love? Universal, existing in all things, permeating all nature; never was it not. It is, and will always be, the breath of the infinite, the god within us. Who asks what is love? I would not tell him if I could. I could not tell him if I would.

"Existing as it does in all things, is It any wonder that we are at times confused by its varied manifestations? Who but must realize that man is a very complex being? We can but acknowledge at least three men within us. First, the physical, our body, the wonderful organism in which we live; ond, the mind, the thinking, reasoning principle, and above all, strong, eternal, at times thrust aside by the body with its desires; or by the mind with its heresies, yet ever patiently waiting-the spiritual man, the soul.

It seems to me that the problem of why love so often dies and marriage is a failure cannot be better answered Mr. Nash has answered here. It is because men and women are so complex. They are not just individuals. Each has a hundred selves, and each self has a thousand needs and desires

It Is We Who Change, Not only is this true, but these myriad selves of us are constantly changing, so that the thing that thrilled us one day leaves us cold and anmoved the next; the thing that was our heart's desire at 20, fills us with disgust at 30, and the thing that entranced us at 30 bores us at 40. When a couple marry believing themselves much in love, and in a few years find themselves out of love and either in the divorce court or dragging out a miserable existence of double wretchedness, each one blames the other. The wife accuses the husband of having changed. The husband is disappointed, disillusioned in his wife In 99 cases out of 100 it is the indi-vidual who makes the complaint who has changed, and not the party of the other part. The commonplace young man, with the regular profile and the black mustache and the good opinion of himself that the young girl idealized into a fairy prince and married on that platform and whom she finds so tireme now, is no whit altered. mands something more, in a man, than I fan him with hot air. a straight nose and presentable whis

He Simply Tires of This Doll. The man who marries a silly little doll of a woman, because she rolled her eyes at him and asked such adorably idiotic questions, finds that he is about to perish of ennul, and he wonders how she could have changed so. Bless you she's just the same degree of stupidity that she was in the courting days; but the man has changed. He has broad-

N replying to G. A. Howe's question What is love?" Harry Nash of Boston, writes: 25 is a horror to him at 45. He could no more be interested in her again than he could go back to playing jackstraws, or eating lolipops.

It has been said that only fools are happy, and, to a certain degree, this adage is peculiarly applicable to mat-rimony. For the more intelligent men and women are the more they change year by year, and the more risks they take in matrimonial felicity; for their happiness depends upon the individual to whom they are married, changing as they do and to meet their altered The great and terrible difficulty in matrimony is that it is not, and cannot be, eclectic, as friendship is. We have a than the tennis cabinet was to Roosedozen friends that we love for some velt, will not be in such complete po-one particular quality, for the sake of session of the presidential ear in the which we overlook their other attributes.

For instance, we love one man be-cause he is good and true and honest, in spite of the fact that he is tiresome We love another because of his wit and charm, although we know him to be unreliable and not to be trusted. We love another for his friendliness and generosity, although his blundering factlessness gets on our nerves. We all have one friend that we go to in our troubles, another that we seek out when we want to have a good time; one that we like to go to see an Ibsen play with, another that we like to eat peanuts with at a baseball game.

We Demand the Impossible.

It is because we try to find all of these different friends combined in one in a husband or wife that marriage is so often a disappointment. We are demanding the impossible.

The woman wants a husband who will be a hero in romance, a troubadour always singing love songs to her, a man who is gay and dashing, and tender and sentimental and sympathetic and intuitive, and, at the same time, a cracker-jack money maker, and a steady and reliable head of the family; who is domestic and willing to walk the floor with the baby when it has the colic at night. Each of the different kinds of woman she is, demands this kind of a husband, and, when she doesn't get it, she feels that she is a poor, misused creature.

And a man wants as a wife a woman who is a living creature, a good cook, a swell dresser, one who is intelligent He is and entertaining and fascinating, and still commonplace, and still has the a good mother, and yet who is a great economist, and is always willing to but she has changed and needs and de- | stay at home and sit at his feet, and

Each of the different kinds of a man that he is, wants that kind of a wife. and when he doesn't get her he beats upon his breast and cries out that marringe is a failure.

What can we do about it? Nothing. But this complexity of our natures explains why we never realize the great love dream of the world, finding mates who come up to our ideals and are "all in all to us." Like the immortal Mrs. Harris. "There ain't no sich a

The Parting Guest

By Kirkland Allen Wilson.

Daily Short Story

the library windows, snapped asked. in the fireplace. Then I took a cigar stretched myself out in the arm chair before the hearth.

This, to my mind, was solid com-

It proved so comfortable that I soon found myself getting drowsy. I shook ever, for I wanted to finish my cigar. As I lay, midway between waking and sleeping, a strange feeling stole over sensation yourself, I doubt not,

Without opening my eyes and without hearing a sound, I became conin the room. I opened my eyes. I was looking squarely into the muzzle of a tunity to call here again before he re-

At a word, I thrust my hands up obediently, sticking my cigar into my mouth as I passed them up. "Keep 'em there, or I'll pump you full o' lead," my captor admonished

"I always regard a revolver with reverence," I replied. "I have handled one myself, at times, and I may even say that I have faced one before. Hence

He grinned and directed me to stand up. When I was on my feet, he reached forth a wary hand, and drew my revolver from my pocket.

"Sit down," he commanded. can drop your hands now." I was happy to obey, for it stiffens one's arms to hold them over one's head for a while. Try it, and see.

businesslike manner: "It's beastly cold out, tonight," he said, balancing his weapon in one hand, while he held the other out to muzzle moved slowly around until it the warmth of the flames. of a chance to get some life infused "Would you consider it impertinent if I asked you how you got in?" I glance at the blazing logs. "It's hard "Not at all; through a cellar win-laughed, leaning back into the hos-pitable depth of the arm chair. "What "Don't be in too mu pecially a night like this." ered for a moment, then added: from the box on the table, and fact, I do not expect that Mr. Barton will return for two weeks. He and Mrs. Barton went to their Scottish seat for a little winter shooting, taking the servants with them. Of course makes little difference to me-I enjoy independence, even of servants."

He shifted his chair to the other side found myself getting drowsy. I shook of the fireplace, so that he could warm off my languor as best I could, how- the other hand and keep a free arm for his weapon. I was surprised this move, especially in a man of his ilk; for he had placed himself in a position from which he could not con me. You have experienced the same mand the doorway into the hall. I had closed the folding doors into the dining home late tonight," he said, slowly scious that there was some one else and softly, as if weighing my words. course, if he isn't --- turns," I finished, smiling.

"It's a bitter night," I commented. 'And the wind is so trong that it is finding its way through the shutters, and starting up all sorts of draughts through the house. You must have got quite wet, reconneitering the house before you found that convenient cellar window."

The curtain moved convulsively, and a head was thrust cautiously forth from behind it.

He pulled a chair opposite me, close to the fire. He was a pleasant looking chap—about 40. I should say—with a everything's dry underneath." The newcomer moved an arm free of pistol."

pointed at the head of my captor. The man in front of me was rubbing

The other moved clear of the curdow. It was already open," he replied tain. I calculated that he had 10 feet at once. "How did you?"

"Through the front door, of course," stretched weapon would touch the back. The man in the arm chair seemed cause of bringing things right."

"And perhaps if you had yielded to foolish little woman you are. I'm not to go before the cold steel of his out that impulse it might have been the considering leaving you—at least not cause of bringing things right."

He looked at me quizzically. "Isn't than half smoked weed out to him- At the hall door I turned to give this-your health will break down. If usual tenderness,

The Mexican Revolution Is a Protest Without a Program

Has No Leader to Unify Action and Centers of Activity Are Widely Scattered.

> annals of Latin-American revolutions there never has been one abounding in more features

now being waged in Mexico.

out a program. Its leaders protest against existing conditions, yet they have not offered a definite plan for are different, and no leader has appeared upon the horizon who can unify these various enemies of existing conditions into one solid phalanx of op-position to the government. In the third place, it is a revolution pre-doomed to military failure, for neither the men nor the munitions are coming forward in sufficient quantities to make it really formidable.

May Be Political Success.

it is expected to prove a political suc-cess. President Porfirlo Diaz has decided to remedy the abuses against which it is a protest. It is predicted that he will reform his cabinet, remov ing from it the men who have been the stumbling blocks in the way of political reforms. It is stated that vice president Corral, erstwhile his heir apparent, will be removed from office in answer to the public demand. It is asserted that the scientificos, a body of men who have been more to Diaz future. The governors of the various states will hereafter be appointed with more respect for the wishes of the people; and the jefe politicos or rulers of districts and cities, will be down rather than to the officials higher up. Above all, it is probable that means will be found to take the lands

few feudal barons who now control them, and distribute them more gener-

Ding Wears No Velvet Glove,

It is a novel sight to see president

"and then it will be time enough. Why,

The newcomer was five feet nearer.

"I should say so," my fireside com-anion answered, "Don't you remem-

"Why, yes, I remember that," I responded. "All the papers had big stor-

A finely muscled hand was stealing

"Yes, by gosh-that was my case," just such a night as this, too. I man snapping my captor's revolver around to grasp my captor's pistol

it isn't more than 9 oclock."

of the back of his head.

until he est nowerless fore?" I asked.

panion answered.

that time, though."

of the republic out of the hands of the velt, will not be in such complete made responsible to the people ally.

And yet in spite of all these things

Frederic J. Haskin

A EXICO CITY, March 15 .- In the | anything Mexico has ever seen. Be yond all question Diaz has rendered a great service to his country in rescuing It from bankruptcy placing it on a firm financial footing with a credit once peculiar and remarkable than the as good as the average European nathe first place, it is a revolution withtion, and in giving it a stable, and, on the whole, beneficent government. the same time he has ruled with a mailed hand innocent of the velvet glove. With 85 percent of the people remedying those conditions. In the second place, it is in nowise a united of Mexico illiterate, and 10 percent of revolution. There are a half dozen centers of activity, yet in each case the grounds upon which it is based the remainder thoroughly unacquainted with the principles of republican government as Americans understand them, it is obviously impossible to expect elections based on manhood suffrage, and easy to understand why a sort of political absolutism is necessary. Diaz has been firm at all times, harsh frequently, and upon occasions tyrannical. The present spirit of concession to the wishes of the peo ple is seemingly greeted with satisfaction by everybody A Socialistic Effort.

The revolution in the territory south of California is wholly an effort upon the part of avowed socialists to set up a modern Utopia. They would abolish the government and establish a modern socialistic community. The revolution in Chihuahua, while headed by Francisco Madero, an avowed socialist and called by some a dreamer, has a different ground upon which to bid for support. The Terrazas family, to which former ambassador Enrique C. Creel now minister of foreign affairs, belongs, owns nearly everything in Chihuahua, as may be gathered from the statement that over 15,000,000 acres of land constitutes a portion of their holdings. There has been a sort of rotation in the office of governor, in which rotation only the Terrasas famfly has participated for many years. Taxes have been forced up to an inordinate height, and protest always has served to send them still higher. That accounts for the trouble in Chihuahua.

In the state of Vera Cruz, at Orizaba, there is the largest cotton factory in the world, and the trouble there seems to concern labor conditions mere than political conditions. When cer-Diaz yielding to public demand, and it affords a different picture of him from that great quantities of socialist litertain houses were searched it is said ness knows he needed none. "Take good care of yourself, friend Barton," I said. "I'll hurry along." "Were you ever in this house be-As I helped myself to a heavy fur coat in the hall stand, I heard the du.l thud of feet on the snow-covered steps ber that big burglary here, five years of the front porch.

ago? Mr. Barton wasn't flying here at That was why I hastened now, for the first time that evening. I snatched my case from behind the umbrella stand in the corner, settled my hat well down on my head, and slowly opened the door. I slipped out and les about it. But I didn't know that closed it after me before the newcomer had reached the top step, where direction of Capt. Peg. we confronted each other. arm. The revolver was within an inch "Pardon me," he said, "Is Mr. Barton in?" "You are Mr. Ford?" I queried.

he went on proudly, while I set my muscles tense for a spring. "It was He nodded. "Yes, Mr. Barton is in, and quite sneaked up behind my man, and — anxious to see you." I answered. "You "Grabbed him!" finished the other | have the key to the front door, I be-

from him, and bending his arms back find him in the library." "Nery cleverly done," I said, as I heavy, being laden with the Barton jumped to my rescuer's aid. Thrust- silverware, not to mention a considering a hand into the prisoner's pocket, able quantity of Mrs. Barton's lewelry,

Abe Martin

Ther haint nothin' a relative hates worse than a foldin' bed. Th' more important a feller thinks he is around an establishment th' easier he gits sick.

ature, circulated by Francisco Madero's propagandists, were found. In Puebla other cities farther south the trouble seems to relate solely to local misgovernment. While there is an amount of popular unrest not to be overlooked growing out of general conditions, by far the greater portion of all the trouble grows out of local conditions that easily may be remedied. That the revolution will not prove

(Continued on Page Seven.)

Years Ago To-From The Hera'd Ot This Date 1807

Albert Krakauer left, on the noon train for Denver.

Joe Dwyer is doing special work on the customs force. The firemen will hold their annual ball tomorrow night. I. G. Gaal will go to the front for the Corralitos road tomorrow.

The main canal is now full of water which is making the farmers smile. A bicycle was stolen from in front of the home of W. B. Hull on Missouri stret last night. The Aid society of the First Presbyterian church is planning a social tea to be given next week. Conductor Charles Clabby, of St.

Louis, is in town giving his friends tips on the prize fight The McGinty Light Guards practiced their ghost parade last night under the

Mrs. Mary W. Cooper has filed suit in the district court for $15,800 to collect on her husband's policy. J. B. Ducher, a New York Central railroad official was in El Paso this morning en route to California.

Commissioner Sexton discharged a Chinaman this morning as he proved Mrs. C. Worden left for Pitts Pa, this morning after spending three months in this city visiting her son, able quantity of Mrs. Barton's lewelry, Deputy sheriff Johns returned from the Panhandle this morning. He had to ride 100 miles overland from Amarillo, There were 252 cases tried in the po-that the police station was four streets lice court during February of which the held the man's hands while I south, which explains why I turned about 200 were for vagrancy. The I trials this month have numbered 55.

Married Life the Second Year Mabel Herbert Urner How Helen Learns How One Suffers When Love Is Unrequited.

'phone there were tears in her volce.

her hair disheveled and eyes red with the 'phone "Oh, I'm so sorry dear," as she kiss-

"Are you Mr. Barton?" he finally ed her. "I didn't know you'd been ill." "Oh, if it was only that! One can I." stand being ill, but I can't bear this."

"No, I haven't heard for months, receiver. only at times it all comes over me worse than others, and last night I broke down. Look!" motioning to a him about 20 letters last night, and of in a chair, course sent none of them. Hysterical, pitiful, pleading letters. In each one I tried to erpress more, to put all that I wanted to say in a few words—only to tear them up. Under the circum-

"But why can't you? Mightu't it help? Perhaps bring about a reconcili- had whirled them home.

"I wish you could tell me about it, dear. It might comfort you. You know, you never really told me; you've only touched on it now and then." "Not now-sometime I will tell you, vants. We took our two domestics up but not now. Oh, it's all so hopeless to Scotland with us, you know. The If I could only stop caring—but I can't, noise of the storm probably drowned and somehow I feel that I never can the sound of my entrance. I thought He haunts me always. Oh, if I could only forget-could only forget!"

hurled her face and sobbed brokenly. "I wish I knew how to comfort you," "Just your being here comforts me sitting there, at the point of a some. I felt I couldn't be alone a moment longer. I was afraid I might tele-Telephone him! Is he in the city?

"No, I mean by long distance. All for the period I was to be away in only to cross the room, to take down Scotland. However, the police station that receiver, give a long distance num-my captor's head. about to have another apoplectic "Oh, no! You don't know how cold "Oh, don't be in too much of a hurry." I stroke as he saw me start for the door, and hard and austere he is. I'm afraid too serious."

was walking feverishly up and down "Shall I call him up now-while you

Her hand was on the receiver. "Oh, I don't know what to say, If "You mean it's about."—

I knew him I might advise you, but as "Oh, yes; it's about him—it's always it is—I can't." I will-I will," excitedly, "Things

Helen was watching her, her heart beating in her throat. But Katherine desk littered with note paper. "I wrote threw up the receiver and fell sobbing stances I can't write him and yet I'm dition to be left alone.'

And in spite of all protests, Helen finally had her way. She helped Katherine dress and in half an hour a taxicab

"If you could only sleep for a little while before dinner. Wen't you try?" And Katherine, who was worn out with her emotions and her sleepless night, did fall asleep.

When Warren came home she was still sleeping. Helen met him in the hall with whispered explanations. "Then don't wake her for dinner," he said. "The rest will help her far more

So they closed the nursery door and were careful not to disturb her. As they were going in to dinner Helen

'Why what's the matter? Has Katherine upset you, too?"

"Oh, don't joke about, dear-it's far

"All right, Kitten, we won't." And ber when the International Dry Farming congress meets there. The idea of the congress belongs to Mrs. Eleanor L. Burns, wife of the secretary of the Dry Farming congress, and is a splendid one. While the farmers are dis-

The farmer's good wife is his faithful helpmeet in all his undertakings and generally to uplift the various communities and improve conditions generally.

a better country generally.

One paper says that Washington, Lincoln, McKinley and Taft are "the great army mobilizers of the nation." Roosevelt didn't have to mobilize an army; he well enough alone.

ened and developed his life, and the person."

The Herald's

PULLED the heavy curtains over Mr. Barton coming back tonight?" he on the lights, and touched a "Why, no," I responded. "I do not match to the kindling under the logs expect Mr. Barton home tonight—es-ing room. "I had an idea Mr. Barton was com-

"That's very true, he replied eyeing me with a grin. He rubbed the muscles of the arm which held the revol-"Well-I think I'd better be getver. tin' to work now that I've got wurm. Almost imperceptibly, the curtain at the hall door behind me trembled.

"Yes-my outside clothes got pretty to leave em." he added

"Tie his hands," the new arrival di- snow. rected. "You'll find some stout cord in the drawer of that table." knotted the cord securely about his north. Then we shoved him well back into the arm chair before the fire. "You are Mr. Ford, no doubt," said my rescuer, holding out his hand to "I am Mr. Barton." "I am most happy to meet you, Mr. Barton," I responded. "It has seemed strange that I should be enjoying the hospitality of your house without having met you before."

"That's all right," he answered cordially, lighting a cigar after he had passed a fresh one to me. "I had hoped to get here as soon as you did this evening; but my train was snowbound a couple of times on the way down from town, and it was to meet just such an emergency that I sent the boy

The man in the arm chair seemed to pitiful appeal. be having a fit of apoplexy. His face was purple. He seemed to be struggling for words through an ecstasy of bewilderment and anger.

gasped. "I am," was the response. "Confound you. Barton!" exclaimed the other, working himself to an upright position. "I am detective inspec tor Martin, of the detective force. This is a fine piece of work-holding up an officer of the law in the pursuit of his duty. I'll have you in jail for this!" The man's tirades and expostulations were as unfruitful as they were ludicrous. They amused both Barton and myself, especially when the fellow squirmed to his feet and bellowed: "I warn you, Barton, that your guest there is a dangerous criminal!" "You haven't brought very good references with you, Ford," laughed Bar-"I have my papers to prove my identity and my authority," shouted our prisoner. "Open my coat, and you'll

"You can easily forge them," I commented, and could not help giving the fellow a humorous poke in the ribs. "How did you happen to discover my danger?" I asked, turning to Barton. "Well, you know, I sent you my front door key," he replied, "so I borrowed a basement key from one of the ser-We took our two domestics up noise of the storm probably drowned it strange when I heard voices un here, for I know you wouldn't be talking to yourself; so I picked up a re- "I wish I knew how volver, and sneaked up quietly to make said Helen hopelessly. sure of what was going on. I found

"You have my everlasting gratitude, phone him—and I must not do that!"

Mr. Barton," I said warmly.

"Don't mention it, old man," he said I thought"—

I thought"— "Now, I think I'll get you to summon his arm again. "I must get to work the police. I'm sorry the telephone last night I had to fight myself away "Oh, I don't know, but if anything now," he said. He cast a regretful isn't in use, but I had it disconnected from the 'phone. To know that I had should ever happen—if we should ever is only a short distance along this ber and I would hear his voice!"

you think—that I'd take your pleaded. "My clear will be finished in but Mr. Barton quieted him by four- of him. I've always been afraid of him."

about two minutes"—I held the more ishing his revolver in his face. "But Katherine, you can't go on like

Just let yourself in. You'll that he was born in this country.

I recollected Mr. Barton's remark

IT WAS Thursday, the day Helen had you think a reconciliation is hopeless asked Katherine Graut to dine with then you must try to put him out of them. But, at noon, she called up your life." Though as she spoke Helen saying she was quite ill and begged felt the weakness and futility of her Helen to come to her. Even over the words. The Ordeal at the 'Phone "Bring the baby if you can't leave ber, but come—just come," was the Helen found her in a darkened room, the room, Suddenly she stopped before are here?" Her voice was tense, her eyes brillian; with excitement, "Shall "Something has happened-you have can't be worse than they are." Her hand trembled as she took down the "Hello!"

> "I can't-I can't. I'm afraid!" "Listen Katherine." Helen was determined now. "You are going to put en you things and come home with me and stay all night. You are in no con-if I have any pride at all," she sobbed. "If there is ever a reconcilitation, it must come from him."

than anything else."

suddenly put her arms about Warren and asked impulsively "Oh, dear, you DO love me, don't you? We are happy and secure in our be separated-I'm afraid I'd suffer just the way she does. He laughed indulgently. "What a

"But Katherine, you can't go on like stooping over he kissed her with un-